BACKGROUND

The 1st International Conference on Law, Economic and Governance in Semarang, Central Java-Indonesia held by Faculty of Law, Diponegoro University and Faculty of Law, Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia. It provides a forum for scholars, researchers and practioners to share their ideas, results of researchs and experiences in dealing with recent issue: the challenges of law, economic and governance towards social justice in diversity.

The issue of the conference is interesting and important at this time, especially in the era of Asean Economic Community (AEC). The implementation of AEC is a form of cooperation among the ASEAN countries through integration in the economic sector as a single market in the region of Southeast Asia. Surely, in one side it provides a wealth of opportunities of integration, collaboration and competitiveness to business community and general public. But in other sides, it will cause many problems and Indonesian society must be confident in responding and adapting to this new era. Thus it requires the challenges in various fields particularly in law, economics and governance.

Therefore we invite scholars, researchers and practioners to share their ideas, results of researchs and experiences in dealing with recent issues in law, economic and governance towards social justice in diversity. We are looking forward to welcoming you in Semarang on September 4-5th 2017.

CONSIDERING MIXED METHOD MODEL OF RESEARCH FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF LOCAL LAW IN INDONESIA

Abstract

Juridical normative (dogmatic) research is well-known as currently dominant approach influenced with positivism and post-positivism paradigm. Normative research is also famous as the pure legal approach or internal legal approach and is a 'mono-disciplinary research' which tends to be closed and rigid. This method came up from the need for regulation and as the consequence of the phenomenon of "the statutoriness of law". Normative legal research (seems) to be taken (for granted) from the "legal research" terminology or "legal research instruction in the Western, of which, in United States of America, was initiated by several publishers in the early 20th Century. Normative legal research holds some crucial weaknesses such as the tendency to simplify i.e. ignoring various aspects in the complex reality of life. The relation among law, man, environment and the creator is so abandoned that legal research is dried up of aspects of values, symbols, cultural meanings and humane morality, and is even extremely impoverished with actions. Such ignorance inflicts on the damage of the legal, social order and the destruction of ecological life (environment) by the formal legal policies which take sides more on the power. Moreover, ontologically, the use does not fit the reality of complex Indonesia. Legal research should have open characteristic and reflect the cultural nature of the people in which the law is living that is the daily reality of people, local wisdom, and the real conditions of the society. Legal research should be a transformative-participatory research taking side on the interest of the people. Legal research should be with characteristic of collaborative to be more adaptive and able to explore the living values in the society, therefore the research would take side on the interests of local people who tend to be marginalized by the law.

Keywords: Legal research, local values, transformative-participatory research
